HONGKONG DISPENSARY.

Hongkong, July 27th, 1876.

The outroges which took place on the 18th instant at Kongwang, on the Shanghai and Woosung Railway, though much to be regretted, do not signify either any accession of animosity towards foreigners or opposition to the railway on the part of the natives. In the first justance, Mr. Adams, the stationmaster at Kong-wang, appears to have acted:

reports in the Shanghai papers, and have excited opposition rather than allayed it by fence was going on. The attack on Mr. H. accounts given, however, it would seem that his contempt for the foreigners, rudely seized the bridle of Mr. Bonk's pony, with the upparent intention of frightening it. He then of Aberdeen fever. citable disposition of the Chinese, foreigners should be careful to refrain from striking thom. Not only are such acts sure to provoke an instantaneous demonstration of hostility, but they are also highly calcu lated to engender ill-feeling not easily allayed. The Chinese will not submit to a blow, and it would no doubt be better to smother resontment, if possible, on some occasions rather than provoke an outbreak, the results of which can never be properly gauged. Foreigners have an idea that it is impolition to allow the Chinese the slightest pretence for imagining that they fear them, added to which they feel a natural reluctance to pass over an insult from a people they hold to be in many respects inferior. Such collisions as those at Kongwang will, consequently, be always liable to occur. It is impossible to make all the natives courteous and reasonable, or to expect all foreigners to put the rein upon their indignation and wrath when insulted without pretext. No doubt, as the Chinese come to know foreigners intimately, a great many projudices and false notions concerning them will vanish be too much to hope, however, that at any time intercourse between them will ever be

A shocking instance of judicial barbarity in China is related by the Foochow Herald. A wretched man who was caught in the act of plundering during the recent inundations has just been starved to death in the inost inhuman manner by the native officials of Foodhow. He was placed in a wooden cage at the South Gate of the city and supplied with a few drops of congee per diem, just sufficient to prolong his agony, but not enough to assuage the pangs of hunger or thirst-In this miserable condition the unhappy victim of judicial cruelty lingered for eight leng days, suffering the most dreadful torture Such barbarity is of itself sufficient to prove how far removed the Chinese laws are from the humane and enlightened principles that guide Western nations. Our horror of this cruelty, however, and our condomnation of it, will not allow forgetfulness of the fact that it is not so very long ago since the Inquisition practised almost equally fiendish tortures, and that, too, in the sacred name of religion. After all there is more excuse for the Chinese inflicting these fearful punishments on criminals than for that most monstrous institution, which for the sake of maintaining the ascendency of the Roman Catholic faith was guilty of cruelties at the relation of which mankind shudders, and which have done much to undermine the influence of religion all over the Confinent. None the less, though, dowe deploye the indifference to suffering manifested throughout the Central Kingdom, and which may be taken as a certain sign of the great-poverty prevailing in most parts of the Empire. The struggle to support existence is so severe in many districts that the people grow strangely selfish and apathotic. The Japanese Government has just abolished the practice of torture, and the example is one that should commend itself to the Government of Peking, It is not a desirable or London Mr. F. Algar, Clement's Lane. creditable thing to any nation to be thus left. in the rear in every movement. But it is a d fficult thing to rouse the Chinese officials to action, even when they admit the justice and expediency of any change. It would not be difficult, doubtless, to find some Chinese officials whom the narration of the Foochow starving case would move to pity and indignation, but it would be much harder to find one who would recommend, much less attempt, agitation on the subject. All reform, all change is in China regarded with aversion. No wonder that progress is slow, and that foreigners sometimes give up hoping retire, and the lot fell upon Wong. Accordingly

REVOLUTIONS IN THE INDIAN

TRADE.

M. do Lieceops' grand idea has brought the udian carrying trade into a new phase of exist-ance. That trade has passed through three distinct stages. The first was in the palmy days the old East Indiamen, floating mansions, with apacious accommodation, and every luxury. that could make the monotony of a residence n them tolerable. White the Ho abou Castle or the Marquis Wellesley lay berthed in the dooks intending passengers paid them frequent visits; to see to the furnishing of cabins that were in reality little bedrooms. They laid in linen for the half year or so during which they were to lispense with the services of washerwomen and they were disposed to secondality, like Mr. Joseph Sedley, they did not trust to the iberal commissariat of the ship but provided s special sea stock in the shape of claret and cornar and casks of sod water. And, having completed their leisurely proparations, they went by road to some port down Channel where the ship was to pick them up. There was no seramble or bustle then, as in these times of cheap correspondence and postal contracts. The captain came ashore and put up at the chief inn, that he might make, an app rtunity of showing hospitality to his fature passengers. The last evening in England was relabrated by a grand dinner, and the sorrows of parting from home and friends were submerged in the excitement of a new society, or drowned in the wineglass and the punch, bowl. These captains in the old Company's service were bir men who had doing excellent business in profitable monopolies. They were entitled to a handsome percentage when they carried the precious metals in freight They made money fast and invested it in Leadenhall-street, till they came to be held in double respect by their owners; a few prosperous voyages enabled them to retire if they pleased, and to some of them the service became stepping-stone to places on the Board. At the same time they had no small inducement to stick to their calling. Pecunidry considerations apart, their position was singularly

The Emperor Napoleon, who was always generous of Government help for patriotio interprises, enabled the Messageries Imperiales to underbid them. Then followed the revival of commercial enterprise in Italy, and the establishment of lines of Italian puckets niving to Alexandria from Italian barbours. Still they might bave been tousted to hold their own, had not the opening of communications through the isthmus changed all the foatures of the Indian trade. As one of their veteran officials remarked in a spirit of desponding prophecy. That big ditch will be the death of us." although it is to be hoped the prediction may be falsified by events, there was unfortunately too much in it. An impulse was given to indiscriminate competition. Great firms in London and Liverpool built long serew steamers for cargo with a vast capacity of tonnage. Small adventurers followed in the wake of the leviathans, frequently coming to sudden grief, but iquidating bravely and going on again. Tralers in Bombay and elsewhere chartered vessels on their own account for particular voyages. Many of these ships carried passengers cheap. The Peninsular and Oriental had to rovise their tariff, at a general reduction of 30 per cent. They met the more economical views of their patrons by selling wine. Ac., to those who asked it instead of foreing it upon everybody gratis and ad libitum. Freights fell lieastrously. It shows the melancholy change from the old times, that the silk which once brought them £40 a ton must be carried now for the same number of shillings, while they only come in for a share of the consignments: As for more bulky goods, coals can be delivered so obeaply in the Indian Ocean that it answers better to send them out from England than to buy them of somewhat inferior quality either in Australia or at Laboan. And it must be remembered that every ton of freight bas to pay. the heavy dues of the Canal Company The Peninsular and Oriental had to alter their system altogether, in order to hold their own. They had reduced their passenger fares, tracts under more stringent conditions and at less remunerative rates. Next they had to commit themselves to competition for their to avoid transhipment. Consequently they had to decide on a complete reconstruction of a fleet that had been built for an entirely ment, Paddle vessols were turned into sorews: narrow. As a masterolece of modern construc-

A PLEASANT RECOLLECTION. window the movements of a bright pretty little girl seven years of age. She was in under the window. It was amusing to see how impartially she divided the contents of her own little feet. Her simple but becoming dress contrasted favourably with the gorgeous apparel now worn by the little dumsels of the risin r generation—a large straw hat and a suit of white cotton; a coloured fichu round the neck was the only ornament she wore. The young lady I am describing was the Princess Victoria, now our gracious Sovereign, whom may God long preserve! -" Fifty Years of My Life," by George

A LEGEND OF MULL.

Thomas, Earl of Albemarle.

A lady writes to the Nether-Lochaber correspondent of the Inverness Courier :- " need not, of course, ask you if you know the very fine pipe tune 'Macrimmon's Liment,' belief reaches right across the island from the east shore to the west. This cave, in the old courage to explore its dark labyrinthine windings. At a wedding party assembled in a handet in the neighbourhood of the cave. subject of conversation. All agreed that no hum in being could possibly pass through it and live. The piper of the district was a very brave mon as well as an admirable piper. he offered for some slight wager to traverse the cave from side to side of the island, with a pine torch stuck in the front of his bonnet to give him light, and playing the pipes all the time. The piper theroupon entered the the wedding guests followed above, led in the proper course by the music, which could: be heard faintly from below. More than half the cave was traversed, when suddenly the music changed from a brisk march to a dolefel lament. This lament, duly interpreted told the people above that things were becoming uncomfortable with the piper-first, that the pine torch was almost burned out, and again that his breath was failing him, whilst the boldest of the wolves slowly retired before him, only kept at bay by the flickering of the torch and the sound of the pipes, but ready to the spring upon and devour him the instant the torch should be extinguished and the music of the pipes should cease. It was then that the doomed piper played "Chatill mi tuilleadh" so mournfully, I wi return no more . And this too-
